

The need for better public service delivery

Citizens deserve services that are transparent, predictable, and fair

It is truly disheartening how, despite claims of progress and development, citizens continue to endure harassment, bribery, and endless delays in accessing even the most basic public services.

To that end, Transparency International Bangladesh's revelation that passport services top the corruption list is unsurprising. What should be routine, obtaining a

What is even more egregious is that historically, such practices have disproportionately harmed the poor and middle class, who lack the connections or resources to bypass corrupt systems. Much like always, the affluent classes face little to no issues. It is about time the government stopped treating corruption as an unfortunate side effect of bureaucracy, especially when it comes to public service delivery. It must be acknowledged for what it is: A systemic failure that demands systemic reform.

passport, has become nothing if not a labyrinth of exploitation. The passport office is of course not an isolated case but a symptom of a deeper malaise. To call how we receive public services any form of service delivery would be generous. Corruption in public services has played a major role in eroding trust in the government. Indeed, when citizens must pay bribes simply to secure documents, licenses, or utilities, they are certainly not being served but rather are being preyed upon. What is even more egregious is that historically, such practices have disproportionately harmed the poor and middle class, who lack the connections or resources to bypass corrupt systems. temic reform. Bangladesh may have made strides in expanding access to services, but expansion without accountability only multiplies opportunities for graft, which is what we have seen over the years. Citizens deserve services that are transparent, predictable, and fair. They deserve a system where rights are guaranteed, not negotiated through bribes. Tackling corruption in service delivery is a foundational element of governance. Public services must serve the people, not exploit them.

We must reduce our dependence on imported edible oil

Bangladesh cannot claim true food security until this happens

The coastal belt also offers a promising frontier. Salt-tolerant sunflower varieties are already showing encouraging results in districts such as Bhola, Noakhali, and Patuakhali, where traditional dry-season crops often struggle due to salinity. Similarly, improved soybean and sesame varieties are creating new opportunities in southern and drought-prone regions. However, scientific breakthroughs alone will not solve the crisis unless they reach farmers effectively. One of the most serious barriers remains the shortage of quality certified seeds. Too many farmers still rely on low-quality farm-saved seeds that limit productivity and discourage commercial-scale cultivation. Strengthening community seed systems, expanding multiplication programs, and encouraging private sector participation are therefore essential. The government must also recognize that oilseed development requires the same level of strategic importance once given to rice production. Farmers need access to affordable machinery, low-interest credit, subsidized inputs, and guaranteed market facilities.

Although Bangladesh has achieved remarkable progress in rice production and staple food availability, the edible oil sector continues to expose a deep structural weakness in the agricultural economy. Every year, billions of dollars leave the country to meet domestic demand for vegetable oil, creating a silent but serious burden on foreign currency reserves and national economic stability. According to recent estimates from the SAARC Agriculture Centre (SAC) and the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS), Bangladesh currently imports more than 70% of its edible oil requirement, costing the nation billions annually. In a period marked by global market instability, geopolitical tensions, and unpredictable supply chains, such heavy dependence on foreign imports is an economic concern and a strategic vulnerability. Of the total import bill in the last fiscal year, soybean oil accounted for Tk 33,361 crore, representing nearly 59% of total spending, while palm oil imports cost Tk 22,954 crore or about 41%. The statistics show a significant shift in import patterns compared with FY 2023-24. Expenditure on palm oil imports declined by 31.4%, falling from Tk 33,461 crore to Tk 22,954 crore. In contrast, spending on soybean oil surged dramatically by around 150%, rising from Tk 13,329 crore to Tk 33,361 crore. Industry observers attribute the increase largely to higher import volumes and fluctuations in international prices. The challenge is not rooted in a lack of agricultural potential. Bangladesh possesses fertile land, experienced farmers and a strong agricultural research infrastructure. The real problem lies in policy priorities, weak market systems, and decades of underinvestment in the oilseed sector. While rice cultivation has consistently received strong institutional support, oilseed crops have remained confined to marginal lands with limited incentives and poor technological support. Research institutions such as the Bangladesh Agricultural Research Institute (BARI), the Bangladesh Institute of Nuclear Agriculture (BINA) and agricultural universities have already developed several high-yielding, climate-resilient oilseed varieties capable of significantly increasing domestic production. Short-duration mustard varieties including BARI Sarisha-14, 15 and 17 have demonstrated that oilseed cultivation can successfully fit into existing rice-based cropping systems without threatening national grain security. This innovation is particularly important for Bangladesh, where expanding agricultural land horizontally is almost

JS unanimously adopts sovereignty."The nation has become optimistic following the successful visits by the leader of the House and prime minister," the Speaker said, adding that people from all walks of life were expressing appreciation for the achievements of the tours.He then placed before the House the motion expressing parliament's gratitude to the prime minister for the outstanding success of the official tours, which was adopted unanimously by voice vote. Earlier, while moving the motion, Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir described the prime minister's Malaysia and China visits as highly successful and of immense importance for Bangladesh's diplomacy and economic interests.He said the prime minister undertook the visits as the representative of Bangladesh's democratic government after nearly 18 years of what he termed "fascist rule", adding that the tours further strengthened bilateral relations with both countries on the basis of mutual respect. The minister said several important agreements and memorandums of understanding (MoUs) were signed during the visits, while the prime minister established himself as a respected national and international leader through his commitment to public welfare and efforts to introduce a new political culture. Highlighting the China visit, he said 17 MoUs were signed following bilateral discussions between the prime minister and the Chinese leadership, while cordial talks with the Chinese President deepened cooperation between the two countries.He said both China and Malaysia reaffirmed their commitment to supporting Bangladesh's economic development and expressed willingness to expand cooperation further, including extending support in addressing challenges such as the Rohingya crisis. The LGRD minister also lauded the prime minister for discouraging elaborate public receptions during official foreign visits."Despite the remarkable success of the tours, the prime minister instructed that no public receptions be arranged, thereby setting a new political culture that avoids unnecessary public inconvenience," he added. Participating in the discussion, Finance Minister Amir Khosru Mahmud Chowdhury said the Prime Minister's visits had established a new 'benchmark' for Bangladesh's diplomacy by reaffirming the country's commitment to mutual respect, mutual interests, non-interference in internal affairs and strategic autonomy. "The visits were firmly rooted in Bangladesh's long-standing foreign policy principles of maintaining friendly relations with all countries based on mutual respect, shared interests, non-interference and strategic autonomy," he said.The finance minister said the prime minister's decision not to arrange large crowds or ceremonial receptions at airports reflected a significant 'cultural change' in Bangladesh's political practice and set an important standard for future democratic polities. He said Bangladesh would never compromise its national interests and would continue to utilise every opportunity for economic cooperation with all countries for the benefit of its people.Highlighting Malaysia's importance, Amir Khosru said Bangladesh has significant interests there in labour migration, energy cooperation, trade and investment. Referring to China as Bangladesh's largest trading partner and a key development partner, he said discussions focused on reducing the trade imbalance by increasing Bangladeshi exports to the Chinese market."The successful visits have not only strengthened bilateral relations with Malaysia and China but also reaffirmed the principles that will guide Bangladesh's engagement with the international community in the years ahead," he added.Leader of the opposition Dr. Shafiqur Rahman also expressed his party's support for the motion, reaffirming the opposition's commitment to safeguarding Bangladesh's independent foreign policy and national interests. "Bangladesh belongs to all its citizens," he said, stressing that the country should pursue a truly independent foreign policy. "The country comes first." Assuring the government of the opposition's cooperation on issues involving national interests, he said the opposition would always stand beside any initiative that served the country's greater interests.Describing Malaysia and China as Bangladesh's longstanding and trusted friends, Dr. Rahman said the country remains an import-dependent economy and emphasised the need to diversify both exports and overseas employment through short, medium and long-term planning. He expressed the hope that these priorities had been addressed during the prime minister's discussions with the two countries. he opposition leader also underscored the importance of parliamentary democracy and called for placing major international agreements before parliament to ensure greater transparency and accountability.e said Bangladesh's relations with all countries should be based on mutual respect, equality and mutual interest while maintaining an independent foreign policy free from external interference.Dr. Shafiqur Rahman further said parliament should remain the focal point of all state affairs and called for strengthening democratic practices through constructive engagement between the government and the opposition.He also stressed the need for a healthier political culture in which the ruling party respects the opposition while the opposition contributes constructively to nation-building instead of opposing every government initiative. Concluding his speech, the opposition leader wished the prime minister good health, long life and continued success before reiterating his party's support for the thanksgiving motion. The unanimous adoption of the motion reflected an uncommon consensus across the political divide, with both the government and the opposition acknowledging the strategic importance of the prime minister's Malaysia and China visits in advancing Bangladesh's foreign policy, economic diplomacy and national interests.

Shaikh Farid urges Lions Club quality services are ensured, there will never be a shortage of beneficiaries," he added.The state minister also assured the organisation of the government's support in implementing humanitarian and public welfare programmes.Khulna City Corporation Administrator Nazrul Islam Monju attended the programme as the special guest. Khulna Development Authority (KDA) Chairman Advocate Shafiqul Alam Mona, Lions leaders AKM Golam Faruque and Sabina Siddiqua and Dr M Borhan Uddin also spoke on the occasion. The programme was chaired by senior Lions member Dr Ranjit Kumar Nath, while Dr Monoj Kumar Das delivered the welcome address.

PM's Malaysia, China visits open example in the country's political culture by ending the long-standing practice of colourful receptions before departing for and after returning from official foreign visits."Our leader has already established a strong position both nationally and internationally. The people of Bangladesh believe that he is working firmly for the welfare of the people and creating new precedents by abandoning old negative political practices," he said.Finance Minister Amir Khosru Mahmud Chowdhury and Leader of the Opposition Dr Shafiqur Rahman also took part in the discussion on the thanksgiving motion. Later, Speaker Hafiz Uddin Ahmad, Bir Bikram, put the motion to a voice vote, and it was unanimously adopted by the House.

On June 1, 2025, the Chittagong City Corporation signed a memorandum of understanding with the fake company at the chamber auditorium at the Agrabad World Trade Center in Chittagong. Earlier on Monday (June 22), the Egyptian Embassy in Dhaka informed the Bangladesh Foreign Ministry and the Bangladesh Investment Development Authority (BIDA) in writing that Kausar Alam Chowdhury was not an authorized representative of Orascom or The Arab Contractors. The next day, the Foreign Ministry informed the Chittagong City Corporation about the matter and instructed it to take necessary action. After receiving that information, Mayor Dr. Shahadat Hossain signed a document canceling all previous contracts. In a meeting with a delegation of the Dhaka Transport Coordination Authority (DTCA) at the Chittagong City Corporation's rest house on June 6, Greater Chittagong Economic Forum President Amir Humayun Mahmud Chowdhury said that monorail could be a more realistic and cost-effective solution in Chittagong than metrorail. Later, a letter was also sent to BIDA seeking the necessary approval and cooperation for the project. But according to information received from the Egyptian Embassy and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Kausar Alam Chowdhury is not an authorized representative of the consortium concerned. In this situation, all contracts signed with him have been canceled. A copy of the office order has been sent to the Executive impossible. The future therefore depends on vertical expansion, producing more from the same land through improved varieties, mechanization, better seed systems and modern farming practices. The coastal belt also offers a promising frontier. The government must also recognize that oilseed development requires the same level of strategic importance once given to rice production. Farmers need access to affordable machinery, low-interest credit, subsidized inputs, and guaranteed market facilities. At the same time, the domestic edible oil processing industry must modernize its extraction and storage technologies to improve efficiency and product quality. Public-private partnerships can play a decisive role here. Decentralized processing hubs, contract farming arrangements and transparent buy-back systems would not only protect farmers from market volatility but also encourage long-term investment in oilseed cultivation. Consumer awareness is equally important. Locally-produced mustard oil and other indigenous edible oils possess nutritional and cultural value that should be promoted more aggressively. Building consumer confidence in domestic products can help create a stronger local market and reduce dependence on imported alternatives. Bangladesh has repeatedly demonstrated its ability to overcome agricultural challenges through coordinated policy, scientific innovation, and farmer resilience. The edible oil sector deserves the same national commitment. Reducing import dependency is not simply about saving foreign currency. It is about protecting economic sovereignty, strengthening rural livelihoods, and ensuring long-term food security.

Chairman of BIDA, the Secretary of the Local Government Department, and the Director General of the Africa Division of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. On June 20, a Dhaka-based daily called 'Agamir Soyo' published an investigative report on the allegations of fraud surrounding the Chittagong monorail project, which sparked widespread discussion. Later, after the positions of the Egyptian embassy, ??the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and relevant foreign institutions became clear, the Chittagong City Corporation decided to cancel the contract. The newspaper's investigation revealed that a group using the names of world-renowned construction company 'Orascom Construction' and Egyptian state-owned company 'The Arab Contractors' signed a memorandum of understanding and agreement with the Chittagong City Corporation in the name of implementing a monorail project worth about Tk 30,000 crore in Chittagong city. At the request of the Chittagong City Corporation to verify the feasibility and implementation of the project, the Bangladesh Investment Development Authority (BIDA) considered the matter as a foreign investment project and sent a letter to the Ministry of Road Transport and Bridges, Local Government Department and Power Department to take necessary measures. Later, the project also found a place in various government-level meetings, coordination meetings and policy-making discussions. However, the investigation revealed that the people behind the agreement did not have any valid authorization letter, power of attorney or legal document of representation from the two foreign institutions. When asked about the matter, BIDA and Chittagong City Corporation could not produce any such document. Then, the Cairo headquarters of Orascom Construction stated in writing that they do not have any authorized representative in Bangladesh and that no person named Kausar Alam Chowdhury is associated with the company. Later, the Egyptian Embassy in Dhaka also expressed a similar position after the investigation, calling the entire claim baseless. The newspaper's investigation revealed the name of Kausar Alam Chowdhury as the main mastermind of the fraud ring. He claimed to be an authorized representative of 'The Arab Contractors' and 'Orascom Construction' and attended various government offices and meetings. Although he showed a trade license from Gazipur City Corporation as proof of approval from a foreign organization, he could not show any document of mandatory approval from BIDA or RJSC. The alleged CEO of Peninsula Consortium, M Ali Nazir Shaheen, was associated with the same ring. According to RAB information, he was arrested and convicted on charges of defrauding members of the military of crores of taka in the past and was later declared undesirable in various army establishments. The investigation also revealed that this ring was not limited to the monorail project in Chittagong, but they also communicated and acted with various government institutions regarding investment proposals for a solar power project in Khulna and a port in Mongla. Meanwhile, in a contract with the Chittagong City Corporation, the name of Amir Humayun Mahmud Chowdhury, president of an organization called 'Greater Chittagong Economic Forum', along with the fake organization 'Arab Contractors-Orascom Peninsula Consortium' created by the fraud ring, has been seen. He is the brother of Finance Minister Amir Khasru Mahmud Chowdhury. Amir Humayun Mahmud Chowdhury has been seen leading every event, meeting and conference of the fraud ring regarding the alleged monorail. Ali Nazir Shaheen, one of the main leaders of the fraud ring, is the member secretary of the organization called 'Greater Chittagong Economic Forum'.

WB approves $1.1b emergency support to safeguard food security, livelihoods

Staff Correspondent

The World Bank has approved $1.1 billion for two projects to help Bangladesh mitigate the price and supply volatility in the global fertilizer and fuel markets, sustain food security, and enable rapid response. "Rising food, fertilizer, and fuel prices stemming from the Middle East conflict, along with tighter fiscal space have deeply impacted Bangladesh's economy, hitting smallholder farmers as well as poor and vulnerable people the hardest," said Jean Pesme, World Bank Division Director for Bangladesh and Bhutan. "The World Bank has stepped up with immediate support to help Bangladesh mitigate this impact to ensure fertilizer supply for rice production, protect households, jobs and livelihoods and continue with essential services." Added Pesme. The Emergency Support for Food Security Project ($300 million) will provide time-bound financing to help Bangladesh import fertilizers critical for the Aman and Boro seasons in July–October 2026 and October 2026–April 2027, respectively. The country imports more than 85% of its fertilizer requirements. The project will finance imports of 600,000 metric tons of critical fertilizers, half of which would be Urea, covering 1,400,000 hectares of rice production cultivated by smallholder farmers, said a World Bank press release. "Bangladesh's food security depends on Aman and Boro rice seasons, which together account for about 90% of the country's total rice production. Further, about half the population is employed in agriculture sector. So, any disruption in fertilizer supply would not only threaten food security, it would deepen poverty and cost this backlog, foreign institutional and individual investors wrote to the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission (BSEC) Chairman requesting necessary measures to prevent the GDR from being delisted and sought the cooperation of the DSE Brokers Association of Bangladesh (DBA) in the matter.

Recognising the urgency, DBA President Saiful Islam led swift coordination between BSEC and BEXIMCO Pharmaceuticals' management to urge the necessary steps in the wider interests of investors.Acting on DBA's initiative, BSEC granted the company permission to hold a special board meeting, enabling approval and publication of the third-quarter financial statements for fiscal year 2024-25, the audited annual financial report, and the first, second and third-quarter reports for fiscal year 2025-26.

This resolved the company's reporting backlog, prompting LSE to lift the trading suspension and approve the resumption of GDR trading with effect from June 26, 2026.

DBA believes the development will reinforce Bangladesh's international capital market image and credibility, strengthen foreign investor confidence, and consolidate the country's position in global markets.DBA President Saiful Islam expressed sincere gratitude to Finance and Planning Minister Amir Khosru Mahmud Chowdhury, Prime Minister's Special Assistant for Investment and Capital Markets Tanvir Sani, BSEC Chairman Masud Khan, BSEC commissioners and officials, the board and management of BEXIMCO Pharmaceuticals PLC, and the print and electronic media for their cooperation and effective support.DBA hopes the government will continue to prioritise attracting greater foreign investment into Bangladesh's capital market and will sustain investor-friendly policies, effective reforms, and timely measures to build international investor confidence.

ence, who wanted to deprive Bangladesh of its intellectuals? You should reflect on that."Farroque said he had heard the call to join the Liberation War from the radio broadcast of President Ziaur Rahman and took part in the war."When we heard the call for war in the voice of Shaheed President Ziaur Rahman on the radio, we were with this party. We left the university and joined the Liberation War."Acknowledging that many freedom fighters are now members of Jamaat, Farroque urged them to speak more about the Liberation War and support greater benefits for veterans."You have many freedom fighters in your party today. When you speak, you should also demand an increase in the allowances for freedom fighters," he said.The BNP lawmaker said the nation would always remember those who were martyred and injured in the July uprising, but stressed that the sacrifices made during the 1971 Liberation War must never be forgotten."We will certainly remember those who were martyred and injured in the July revolution. But we must never forget 1971," he said.

Imagination

Savar.Expressing confidence in the social business movement, Yunus said it would ultimately succeed because it offers solutions to the world's pressing challenges.

"If the world has to survive, we will win. We'll make sure the world becomes a world of three zeros," he said, referring to his vision of zero poverty, zero unemployment and zero net carbon emissions.Yunus stressed that imagination is the greatest strength of humanity and urged participants never to abandon their dreams of creating a better world.

"Imagine the world that we want in detail, and just keep on imagining, and it will happen. That has a strange power," he said.

Calling on delegates to translate their ideas into action, Yunus said imagination alone is not enough unless it is backed by sustained efforts.

He welcomed participants from different countries and expressed optimism that the exchanges during Social Business Day would further strengthen the global movement for social business and accelerate progress towards a more inclusive and sustainable world.Prof Yunus called for a fundamental transformation of the education system, saying it should inspire young people to become creative entrepreneurs and problem-solvers instead of producing job seekers.He said the conventional education system confines human potential in what he described as a "bonsai" mindset, limiting people's creativity and independence."Human beings are not born to work for somebody else," he said, arguing that every individual possesses the innate capacity to create, innovate and contribute to solving social problems.According to Prof Yunus, schools and universities currently take pride in producing graduates who quickly secure jobs, whereas education should encourage students to build enterprises that address societal challenges.

o put that vision into practice, he announced the establishment of Grameen University in Bangladesh as a social business university dedicated to creating a world of "three zeros" - zero poverty, zero unemployment and zero net carbon emissions.He said prospective students will be required to submit essays describing the kind of world they aspire to create, placing imagination and creativity at the heart of the university's academic philosophy.Prof Yunus also congratulated Foreign Minister Dr Khalilur Rahman on becoming President of the 81st session of UN General Assembly, expressing hope that his tenure would bring further honour for Bangladesh.

Welcoming delegates from around the world, he said Japan sent the largest overseas delegation to this year's Social Business Day, followed by Pakistan and Malaysia. He urged participants to continue working together to realise the vision of a world based on social business and the three-zero philosophy.amiya Morshed, Executive Director, Yunus Centre; Ashraful Hassan, Chairman, Grameen Group; and Abdul Hannan Chowdhury, Chairman, Grameen Bank also spoke at the opening ceremony with video messages from António Guterres, Secretary-General of the United Nations and José Ramos-Horta, President of Timor-Leste.The event brought together entrepreneurs, global leaders, academics, policymakers, innovators and youth from around the world.This year's theme is "Social Business: The Language of Peace in a Fractured World."

The two-day conference will feature five plenary sessions and seven breakout sessions, including keynote addresses, innovation showcases, country forums and networking opportunities centred on critical global challenges such as poverty, healthcare, financial inclusion, climate action, education, food security and youth empowerment.
